NAME Maria Doa	DESCRIPTION The conference is titled "From theory to practice - development, training and enabling nanosafety and health research" The conference is focused on increasing information exchange on the research needs for effective health and safety regulation of engineered nanomaterials and regulatory perspectives on nanomaterials. The organizers, which include the QNano Research Infrastructure (the the European Union-funded infrastructure for nanomaterial safety testing) will be using this conference as a means of bringing together researchers and stakeholders such as regulators. A key part of the conference is regulatory approaches to nanomaterials, including United States regulations. The EPA representative will be a keynote speaker in the session focused on the duality in risk assessment where industry stakeholder needs sometimes match those of research and regulatory risk assessors and sometimes are perceived as being opposed, contradictory or onerous. She will be making a presentation on US regulatory approaches to nanomaterials. In addition, she will meet with other participants to discuss research that would support improved regulatory approaches to nanoscale materials. This exchange of information will inform EPA's approach regarding oversight of manufactured nanomaterials. EPA will have the opportunity to exchange views and ideas with leading experts from the nanotechnology research and European health and safety regulatory scientific communities. NAME Abby Hall	DESCRIPTION This hands-on workshop with 25-35 scholars will examine legal barriers and possible incentives to private adaptation to climate change. The outcome goal would be similar to the 2008 CLEAR workshop on adapting legal regimes in the face of climate change, but more specific to the private sector – to come up with principles and an approach to examine how law can facilitate more effective climate change adaptation. Scholars will be from both those engaged in climate change adaptation scholarship as well as scholars engaged in areas in the private sector affected by climate change that we may examine. These areas will likely include a) insurance, b) agriculture/aquaculture, c) local zoning and building codes (design, construction, architecture), and d) private control/use of natural resources. 	The chemical mechanisms that Youngseob Kim has been studying are the mechanisms that EPA uses in regulatory development and which we advise States to use in the SIP process for ozone and PM2.5, so it is crucial to the integrity of EPA's models that we understand any shortfalls in these mechanisms, or discrepancies between different mechanisms. If one mechanism predicts that ozone will decrease with an emission control strategy, but another predicts an increase, this is information that EPA needs to know and correct. In addition, researchers at CERE, including Bernard Aumont, another member of the committee, have developed techniques to represent detailed atmospheric chemistry. This is the first step that EPA needs to adopt in order to derive the next generation of chemical mechanisms - robust and flexible mechanisms that will allow our models to address future modeling needs, and respond to new scientific information. It is crucial that EPA collaborate with the international community on these efforts, because 1) we do not have the resources to do this in house and 2) it is important to have consensus with the atmospheric chemistry community to bring credibility to EPA's products. By participating in this committee and meeting with CEREAs researchers before and after, Deborah Luecken not only gets new, unpublished information to improve current mechanisms, but can start building the steps towards the next generation of chemical mechanisms.

NAME Walt Tunnessen	DESCRIPTION The Electric Power Research Institute (EPRI) is conducting two one day workshops focused on industrial energy efficiency as part of its Industrial Center of Excellence program. The first day's works shop is designed for utility programs that are affiliated with the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). This workshop will involve representative from over 15 different companies and organizations. Note, TVA is an EPRI member as well as a federal agency. The second workshop will involve representatives from electric utilities that are members of EPRI. EPRI has several hunderd members. Both workshops will be wildly attended events. EPRI is very interested in having its member's industrial energy efficiency program managers become familiar with ENERGY STAR resources for the industrial sector. EPRI has invited Walt Tunnessen to speak, at length, about ENERGY STAR tools and resources for the industrial sector and how utility program can incorporate these tools into their efficiency program. EPRI has offered to cover all travel expenses for participating in these meetings. Note: EPRI is also covering travel expenses for other invited experts participating in the workshops. Participation in these meeting provides EPA's ENERGY STAR program with a unique and excellent opportunity to engage and outreach to a key target group. Establishing relationship and encouraging the use of ENERGY STAR tools by utility programs is an important priority for the program. I was invited to speak given my knowledge of ENERGY STAR industry tools and my role in coordinatating outreach to utility programs focus on the industrial sector.	LOCATION Nashville, TN	Electric Power Research Institute	Common carrier transportation	X		$650
